The following represents some good advice that the editor who compiled the סדרה ההלכות שחרית provides just after אָלִילוּה אִבְרַמ (1766) in a place called: אָוָלְנִינוֹ. The editor’s name was: הַנַּבְרָפ וּוֹחֶק הַכֹּהֵן.

After finishing Tephilat Schacharit, a person should learn Torah for a few moments or go to the Beis Midrash and listen to the students. Then he should attend to his affairs and proceed to his place of work because Torah learning that is not combined with work has no value. Poverty will then lead him to violate his Master’s rules. He should conduct his business in good faith. He should speak softly to other human beings. He should not start fights with anyone. He should be careful not to take an oath even concerning a matter that he knows to be true. Most certainly he should not take an oath falsely and he should not mention G-d’s name in vain. He should avoid idleness because idleness causes improper urges. Instead he should always pursue lofty goals and he should always be examining his personality and his deeds. If a person conducts himself within these parameters he will be certain that G-d with bless him with success in whatever he undertakes.
